Therefore the language policy shall rely on these principles:

According to the Law on Higher Education of Republic of Serbia and the Law on National Councils of National Minorities, the written and spoken languages of the University of Novi Pazar are Bosnian and Serbian, whether in teaching and administration. These languages shall be used unless circumstances dictate otherwise.
2. English is also a very important language in the work of the University, due to international students and teaching staff, due to the need to prepare students for participation in the international academic community, and due to the University's participation in all kinds of international collaboration. It is therefore emphasised that information on the University and its operations, as extensive and detailed as possible, should be available in English on the public University website. The University also encourages students and teaching staff to use English in their work where possible.
3. The teaching language for programmes and individual courses shall always be specified in the course catalogue. Where international students are permitted to take courses taught in Bosnian or Serbian in accordance with the course catalogue, teaching staff shall seek to accommodate them, although without changing the teaching language.
4. Bosnian and Serbian shall be the default teaching language in undergraduate studies, except for language teaching. Teaching in English shall be restricted to programmes where there is a specific reason to teach in English; courses taught by teaching staff who are not native speakers of Bosnian or Serbian; and courses which must be taught in English due to the University's international collaborative work.
5. Course assessment shall be conducted in the same language as teaching. In courses (other than language teaching courses) taught in English by Serbian-speaking and Bosnian-speaking teaching staff, the faculty may permit students to submit assignments and sit examinations in Bosnian or Serbian. In courses taught in Bosnian or Serbian, the faculty may permit students who are not native speakers of Bosnian or Serbian to submit assignments and sit examinations in another language.
6. Bosnian and Serbian shall be the default teaching language in postgraduate studies, except in language teaching, although faculties may decide to offer postgraduate programmes partially or entirely in English.
7. Course assessment shall be conducted in the same language as teaching.
8. Even though Bosnian and Serbian are the main languages of doctoral theses, they may be written in English if the doctoral student so wishes, faculty rules permit and circumstances allow.
9. For programmes and courses taught in English, certain minimum requirements will be made of students regarding English proficiency. International students who are not native English speakers and apply for a programme taught in English shall be required to demonstrate that they have received a minimum grade in a recognised international English qualification for foreigners. Departments shall define minimum requirements for the English proficiency of exchange students.

10. The International Relations Office in coorporation with Philology Department shall offer a special Bosnian and Serbian language course for incoming students each semester at beginner level. In this way, international students can adapt easily and quickly to the daily life in Novi Pazar and Serbia in general.
